Calvin Coolidge says that we have no desire to interfere in European affairs and that it certainly would be difficult to secure an agreement from us to become involved in their disputes. How untimely this observation must sound to those tools and dupes of foreign propaganda that are now urging the government to become entangled in European quarrels.

The health commissioner of New York says that the common cold is the most-formidable enemy of the public health and that it takes more money out of the worker's pockets than any other sickness. He thinks that our schools and other public institutions should exercise more care in preventing the spread of this highly infectious disease.

The highest freight rates in the history of the country and the worse service ever experienced is the record of our government's operation of railroads about ten years ago, and after it was all over the American taxpayer had to shoulder a deficit of millions of dollars caused by the carelessness of government management. We must admit, however, that any large government operation will furnish a number of fat jobs for the friends of the politicians.

Petitions to the president on questions of our foreign relations would be more impressive if a large proportion of the signers were not persons who generally take the European side of every question where there is a conflict of interests between the United States and Europe.

According to a report of the department of commerce 92 per cent of those Americans, able and willing to work, are gainfully employed at the present time.

About half of the presi dents of our leading universities seem to think that the United States would be much better off if it should become again a European province.

Owen D. Young, who has suggested that we will have to lower our standard of living with the rest of the world, is now telling the government how to run its foreign affairs and he seems to have the unanimous approval of Nicolas Murray Butler.

Forty years ago Alaska had 1,300 reindeer. Today there are 600,000, giving employment to 13,000 natives. The governor of Alaska thinks that reindeer may become an important food supply for the United States.

Millions of acres in Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan, and also in other parts of the country especially suited for reforestation, are being utterly neglected because our present state and federal laws make reforestation economically impossible. This is a state and federal problem of great importance, which some day perhaps will receive the attention it deserves.

Newark, N. J., has canceled the bull fight which had been arranged for the sportive citizens of the state and vicinity. Maybe they felt that Congress would be too much of a counter attraction.

London financial experts fear a gold famine in the near future. So far as we are concerned it is already on.

That's practically all.

LOCAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE DINNER ALL SET

Tickets are on sale at the Rainbow soda fountain, Shadle's drug store, and by S. N. Hedegard for the annual Chamber of Commerce booster dinner, which is scheduled for Friday night, Jan. 9, at 6:30 o'clock in the grammar school cafeteria. Plans for an excellent meal are being prepared by the ladies of the Grange Auxiliary, who will serve the dinner.

A brief "booster" program will follow the banquet, at which time local people will have an opportunity to hear about the Sunnyvale dirigible base and the effect it is expected to have upon economic conditions in the valley. R. W. Pederson, real estate man of Sunnyvale, will deliver this message, and there will also be present a United States naval officer, who will explain the meteorological conditions which prevail at the Sunnyvale site. Wendell Thomas, president of the County Consolidated Chambers of Commerce, will address the gathering on the activities of the county organization. All of the talks will be brief.

By special permission of the Atwater-Kent foundation Stephen Merrill, recent winner in the national audition at New York, will entertain with a vocal selection. A. A. Thielke, director of music in the Campbell schools, is expected to be on deck with his ever-popular high school orchestra. A good program, with something of interest to everyone.

Sponsors of the affair are optomistic of a good attendance, as a large block of the tickets have already been sold. Be prepared to buy at least two yourself—they are one dollar apiece, which just covers the cost of the dinner. Come and get a "load" of what's going on in the community.

FRED WILLIAMS, WELL KNOWN LOCALLY, DEAD

Fred Williams, for years employed at the local gravel pit and well known in Campbell, was fatally injured last Friday afternoon when a counterweight snapped its cable and fell, hitting him on the head.

Mr. Williams, who left the local pit about a year ago, was in the employ of the Raisch Improvement company and was working at their Guadalupe creek gravel pit at the time of the accident. A heavy loading platform was rigged up with a counterweight to make it easier to handle—a barrel of cement with a cable through it. When directly under it this cable broke and let the weight down with terrific force on Mr. Williams' head.

The injured man was rushed to the San Jose hospital where examination revealed fatal injuries. He died Saturday morning, and funeral services were held yesterday from the parlors of Curry & Grippenstraw in San Jose.

Surviving are his widow, his mother, and a step-daughter, Clara Spaulding.

ANDY JOHNSON HURT IN AUTO SMASH MONDAY

CHRISTMAS CAROLS AT GRANGE MEET

The Orchard City Grange held their regular meeting last Tuesday evening at Odd Fellows hall. Reports on the farms and orchards were heard from W. R. Coupland and J. U. Archibald. Other reports of interest were given. Announcement was made of the installation of officers of the Pomona Grange at Palo Alto to be held Saturday, Jan. 10. Many members of the local Grange are planning to attend.

Following the business meeting was the ecture hour in charge of rMs. Jessie McChesney. Featured on this program were Christmas carols by Mesdames D. H. Cramer, Freeman Howes, H. M. Shadle and Rose Hanger; a story in original verse by Mrs. J. E. Witherspoon and three Christmas carols by Mrs. Howes.

CHRISTMAS "VAC" OVER AT HIGH

"Unwilling trudge the feet that carry them to school . ." That isn't right, but it was the case yesterday when the local high school took up after the Christmas vacation, while the grade school youngsters were still enjoying freedom from the irksome duties of the classroom. Students were apparently reconciled to the grind, however, as few absences were reported. Grammar school starts next Monday.

INSTALLATION OF MASONIC OFFICERS IS PUBLIC EVENT

Charity Lodge No. 362 F. & A. M. held public installation of officers at Odd Fellows hall last evening, starting at 8 o'clock. The hall was well filled with Masons and their friends.

Presiding over the impressive ceremony was Worshipful T. M. Wright, inspector of the 53rd distract, as installing officer, and Worshipful Charles English, inspector of the 54th district, who was master of ceremonies.

Percy H. Dunlap was installed as master of Charity lodge. The outgoing master, who for the next term takes the office of marshall, is Chris Anderson. Harry C. Smith was installed senior warden; Ira Abbott, junior warden; Roy Archibald, treasurer; T. A. Robinson, secretary; Mark Stocker, chaplain; C. E. York, senior deacon; Walker Vaughn, junior deacon; E. C. Merrill, senior steward; William Noethig, junior steward, and James Burnes, tiler.

At the close of the rites T. M. Wright turned the chair over to the new master, Percy Dunlap, who spoke briefly, and called upon Robert Scholtz, past master, who presented the outgoing master with a jewel. Mr. Anderson presented Mrs. Dunlap with a beautiful bouquet in appreciation of the many nights she had stayed at home in order that the new "head man" might attend practice and lodge.

Mr. Dunlap then called upon Charles English, who spoke briefly. He next presented C. T. Fawcett, who recited an original poem. Mr. Fawcett has been a master mason for 59 years, and although he does not belong to the local lodge, he is regular attendance. The gavel which he made for the new master was exhibited by Mr. Dunlap.

Masons and their guests then adjourned to the banquet room, where dancing and refreshments were in order.

AUTO, HORSE, IN FATAL COLLISION

A horse, the property of Manuel Miranda, met an untimely end on North Union avenue at a late hour Saturday night when a heavy sedan crashed into his unsuspecting person. The automobile, after demolishing the horse, careened into a convenient telephone pole and was itself pretty badly chopped up. The driver was not seriously injured.

Owners of horses who would like to see their animals live to a ripe old age should keep them off the highways at night. If they don't get run over they're liable to freeze to death.

CAMPBELL MOURNS PASSING OF JOHN HAGELIN, PIONEER

The bright fires of Yuletide cheer were dimmed for many Campbell folks Christmas morning when it became known that John L. Hagelin, mine owner, pioneer rancher and community benefactor, was dead. He passed away in the early hours of the morning, death being due to a heart ailment with which he had been afflicted for some years.

Mr. Hagelin was interested in Alaskan mining ventures, and when he retired from active management of his properties there 26 years aog he came to Campbell, where he engaged in ranching until his death Christmas. He was a native of Sweden and was 75 years of age.

The deceased was interested in community affairs, having for years served on the high school board. He was a fine neighbor and a kindly gentleman, with a smile and a friendly word for everyone. Many friends was the fruit of his life in this community, as was attested by the large group who attended the funeral services Saturday afternoon at the parlors of Curry & Grippenstraw in San Jose. Interment was made in Oak Hill cemetery cemetery.

Mr. Hagelin is survived by his widow, Mrs. Britta Hagelin, his daughter, Anna, and three sisters, Mrs. O. Strom, Anna Thompson of Berkeley, and another residing in Sweden.

THE SPORT FORUM

By DICK LYNDEN

The West All-Stars fetched in a more or less obsolete type of scoring play last Saturday and broke a significant deadlock late in the final quarter as Buss Mill's eccentric toe projected the winning bolt on a placement from the 11-yard line to beat the East 3-0 in the annual Shrine classic. Fifty-two thousand spectators, contributing practically sixty thousand dollars to the Shriner's hospital fund, witnessed the brilliant engagement.

In the first half the Eastern promenade toward the West goal was annoyingly consistent, but immediately following the respite a general movement to the contrary became evident, especially during the presence of a certain Dutch dynamo, Kitzmiller by name, who rather impudently persisted in being obvious notwithstanding the all-American caliber of his playing associates. In fact, it was Kitzmiller who figured so prominently in every sustained Western hike; it was he who short-kicked to the East's four-yard line, and returned Bruder's forced kick 13 yards to scoring distance, and finally, it was Kitzmiller who held the ball for Mill's placement.

Kitzmiller, former Oregon star, is probably the most under-rated player on the coast. While conceded to rank with the best football men in the northwest, the Flying Dutchman never attained the recognition his services warranted until the Shrine game. Doc Spears, his college coach, however, holds him in the highest esteem, and openly predicted that he would be the stand-out player of the contest. Spears gives credit to Kitzmiller for much of the success of the Oregon team this year, which lost but one encounter during the season.

Midget Wolgast and Franki Genaro, considered to be the principal contenders for the flyweight title, fought to an exasperating draw over fifteen rounds at the Garden last Friday, and so the championship roost is still vacant. Neither fighter showed any considerable desire to mix it, and the 6,500 spectators hooted all the way.

William Monahan, the graduate manager of athletics at the University of California, is yet at large, with little promise of locating a successor to Nibs Price at least for a while. It is rumored that the Berkeley institutions is not looked upon with any especial favor since reports relative to Price's dismissal have been circulated around among the coaches of football. Dick Hanley of Northwestern, Spears of Oregon, and Alexander of Georgia Tech were to be approached by Monahan, according to more recent intelligences.

The Miami fistic extravaganza, planned for February and with protagonists as yet unknown, will profit

High Ideals Sought in Principles of Bahaism

The religious sect known as Bahaism originated in Persia in 1844. The first prophet was Ali Mohammed, or the Bab. Hosein Ali was the first adherent of the Bab and later announced himself as the one Bab foretold. He became known as Baha'u'llah. He died in 1892, and before his departure named his oldest son, Abdul Baha Abbas, interpreter of his text and the center of his covenant. He passed away November 28, 1921, and in his will designated his grandson, Shoghi Effendi, guardian of the cause. The general principles of the Bahais founded upon the teachings of Baha'u'llah are: The oneness of mankind; the independent investigation of truth; the foundation of all religions is one; religion must be the cause of unity; religion must be in accord with science and reason; equality between man and woman; prejudice of all kinds must be forgotten; universal peace; universal education; solution of the economic problem; a universal language; an international tribunal. The Bahais believe in the essential necessity of the intermediation of the Messianic principle, or the holy spirit, in the life of humanity.

Stevenson's Tribute to Civil Autograph Hunter

In 'Word Shadows of the Great," Thomas F. Madigan tells of a lucky man who received this charming letter from Robert Louis Stevenson, then living in Samoa, to whom he had written, asking for his autograph:

"For the one civil autograph collector, Charles R.:

"You have sent me a slip to write on; you have sent me an addressed envelope; you have sent it to me stamped; many have done as much as that. You have spelled my name right; and some have done that. In one point you stand alone; you have sent me the stamps for my own post office, not the stamps for yours. What is asked for with so much consideration I take pleasure to grant. Here, since you value it, and have been at such pains to earn it by unusual attentions—here is the signature. ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON."

Ancient Chessboard

A chessboard seven thousand years old was found in the tomb of the Egyptian high priest, Jarso Angh. Besides the mummy and the chessboard the tomb contained statues of the priest and his wife.

From this find it would appear that the game dates from a period of at least 5,000 years before Christ and that it is of Egyptian and not Persian or Chinese origin, as considered before. The ancient story of the man who agreed to pay a debt by placing a grain of wheat upon the first square of a chessboard, two grains on the second, four grains on the third, eight grains on the fourth, etc., seems also to have been of Egyptian origin. The calculation, thus carried out, will be discovered to require, long before the sixty-fourth square is reached, more wheat possibly than has ever been produced in all the world.—Exchange.

Spider's Wonderful Web

The first thing that a spider does in weaving his web is to lay the foundation line. He attaches a line at the point of departure and crawls along spinning it as he goes and holding up the newly spun thread by the claws of one of his hind feet until it reaches a considerable length. He then draws in the slack and makes it fast. The spider then goes over the line several times to strengthen the foundation, after which he spins the other lines of the web. In the case of lines of webs appearing great distances apart the spider emits a thread, which is cut by the air current from its spinnerets until it becomes entangled in the surrounding branches. This power of emitting silk some little distance and allowing the wind to draw it out is frequently exercised in the early life of many spiders.

Early Card Games

Cards for playing games of chance are of the most remote antiquity and have almost universal usage. There is evidence that they were in use in Egypt at the time of Joseph; that their use extended as far east as Hindustan and China at a period long before their introduction into Europe is well attested. The design and number of cards in a pack varied. Even the names of most of the old games are found only in antiquarian works. Chief among them is one called "primiero." This long continued a fashionable game. Other early games were: Mauve, piquet, loadan, noddy, macle, oupre, gleek, post and pan, and bank rout.

Guests at the H. C. Smith home on Christmas day were James Knappen and Miss Clara Park of Marysville, son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Major King of Watsonville and Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Knappen of Campbell.

In the Negative

She was annoyed and she was venting her wrath on Walter, her future husband.

"And another thing," she continued, "I thought you said your sister was working on the films?"

Walter raised his eyebrows wonderingly.

"What about it?" he murmured.

"What about it?" she echoed. "Why, I was passing the chemist's shop today and I saw her preparing snapshots."

Walter smiled back triumphantly. "That's working on the films, isn't it?" he returned.—London Answers.

Monarch's Penance

The dignitary who was made to perform a penance of standing in the snow while petitioning for absolution and reinstatement, during three days, was King Henry IV, emperor of Germany, who had been excommunicated in 1076 by Pope Gregory VII and who evidenced his submission in this manner. However, after his reconciliation Henry was again excommunicated and his son, Henry V, was excommunicated and reconciled not less than four times.

Revised Version

Turkey was the main course of the dinner, and the small guests were fairly overflowing with good things at the conclusion of the bounteous meal. The club presented a gift to both Mrs. Edith Turner and Mrs. R. Maxon, who prepare the club's weekly luncheon.

Origin of Expression "That Beats the Dutch"

"An American Glossary," by Thornton, gives examples of the use of the expression "That beats the Dutch" as early as 1775, the line "Our cargoes of meat, drink and cloaths beat the Dutch" appearing in a "Revolutionary Song" by Barlett of that date. In the Philadelphia Public Ledger of February 6, 1837, occurs this statement: "That beats the Dutch, saith the proverb; meaning that, as the Dutch beat Old Nick, it is something of an exploit to beat them." Vizetelly and De Bekker's Deskbook of Idioms states that the phrase originated in the days when bitter enmity prevailed between the Dutch and other nations. In this connection, however, it is worthy of notice that most of the expressions that arose out of the struggle between the English and the Dutch in the Seventeenth century were derogatory or derisive; among these are "Dutch courage; to talk double Dutch; Dutch comfort; I'm a Dutchman if I do; Dutch treat; Dutch gold! talk like a Dutch uncle." The saying "That beats the Dutch" is not derogatory and is an American and not an English one, so that it possibly expresses admiration for the fighting qualities of the Dutch in their long struggle with Spain and later with England. Again, as the name "Dutch" is also applied to Germans, it may be a reference to the German mercenary troops of Colonial days.

Vergil More Than Match for "Devylls of Hell"

There are several stories telling how Vergil became acquainted with the "devylls of hell." According to one German legend, Vergil was one day digging in his garden when he came upon a glass filled with what appeared to be wriggling earthworms. But a voice came from the glass begging Vergil to open it and promising to teach him many arts. "Teach me the arts," replied Vergil cannily, "and I will break the bottle and set you free." So they taught him all they knew, and when he opened the bottle, 72 devils crawled out and disappeared.

In another version a single devil promised to give Vergil the magical book of Solomon if he would release him from the bottle. Vergil did, but, frightened by the size of the liberated spirit, tricked him into returning to the bottle in the same way as the fisherman in the "Arabian Nights" tricked the jinn. "Surely you can't make yourself as small as the bottle again," said Vergil. "Easily," replied the devil, and to prove it, returned to the flask. Vergil promptly put in the stopper and kept him prisoner forever.—Baltimore Sun.

Early American Colonist

Edward Maria Winfield was an English merchant and colonist in America. He was born at Stoneley, Huntingdonshire. He served in the English army, both in Ireland and in the Low countries. Becoming interested in schemes for American colonization, he was one of those to whom the patent of Virginia was granted, April 6, 1609. He was the only one of the patentees who sailed to America with the first colonists, and was named in the sealed instructions a member of the council, of which he was elected the first president. He quarreled with the other members of the council, and with Capt. John Smith in particular. His Catholicism threw suspicion upon his loyalty and he was soon deposed, both from the council and governorship, in September, 1607. In 1608 he returned to England.

Posters Long in Use

Actually the poster or placard can trace its ancestry back almost to the dawn of civilization. Egyptian wall paintings, mural decorations and inscriptions, produced more than 3,000 years B. C., have been discovered by archeologists. The modern poster began with Jules Cheret, a Frenchman, born in Paris in 1833, self-taught as a draughtsman. He served his apprenticeship as a lithographer in England, and when thirty years old became interested in announcements of theatrical managers and placards put out about that time urging recruiting for armies. In 1867 the world saw the first modern poster of Cheret's, an announcement of a play enacted by Sarah Bernhardt, then twenty-two years old. The poster announced a fairy play, entitled "La Biche au Bois."

Stage Tragedies

The word "tragedy" is from Greek words meaning goat songs. There are many explanations of the reason for this. Possibly "goat songs" was applied to the chants used by men, clothed in goatskin, who represented the satyrs in the festival of Bacchus. Tragedy took its rise from these songs. The Greek developed it to a high point, especially in the dramas of Aeschylus, Sophocles and Euripides. Aristotle gave as the reason for the existence of tragedy "the purification of the passions through the arousing of fear and pity."

Seventh-Day Believers

The name "Seventh Day Adventists," which is the official designation of a Christian sect, refers to two different beliefs or doctrines. "Adventism" is the doctrine that the second coming of Christ and the end of the world are near at hand, and an Adventist is one who believes in this doctrine. "Seventh day" refers to the fact that the Seventh Day Adventists also believe that the seventh day of the week rather than the first is the true Sabbath, and accordingly they reward Saturday as the Sabbath.

Average Length of Life Constantly on Increase

Figures based on the census of 1920 show that the expectation of life in the United States at birth is 56.4 years (55.3 for males and 57.5 for females). About 50 years ago it was only 40 years. The World Almanac quotes Dr. Louis Dublin, insurance statistician, as saying that the expectation of life has increased but the span of life has remained stationary. He states: "That 20 years have been added to the average length of human life since public health work began to be actively practiced in the early eighties of the last century is true. But this gain can be traced to the reduced mortality of infants and to the cutting down of the unnecessary and preventable deaths of young people from typhoid fever, diphtheria, scarlet fever, smallpox and a host of other diseases, which, for the most part, affect persons under forty years of age. Improvement after the age of forty has been slight and almost altogether limited to women." According to various estimates, the total population of the world is continuing to increase every year.

Picture Earth's Core as Holding Rich Treasure

A bonanza beyond belief exists from two to three thousand miles below the surface of the earth, according to two geophysicts of the Carnegie institute of Washington. From all the known data these scientists infer that this planet is a solid ball of nickel and iron enclosed in three shells of rock.

Conjecture how the financial giants could cash in on that, were it accessible, if from mere pinpricks on the surface they pile up millions! But the scientists follow with the information that a shaft more than 2,000 miles deep would have to be sunk to reach the riches. It is doubtful if all the wealth in the world would pay for excavating a small fraction of the distance.

The core, according to the scientists' theory, is surrounded by three shells. The first is of granite, about 35 miles; the second of basaltic rock, increasing in density for about 1,000 miles, and the third of heavy rock impregnated with iron, or nickel and iron, for 1,000 to 1,500 miles.

Cintra the Beautiful

Cintra lies at the foot of steep wooded hills and is one of the most beautiful and historic spots in Portugal. Byron wrote of Cintra: "If there be any place in the world entitled to the appellation of an enchanted region it is surely Cintra; Tivoli is a beautiful and picturesque place, but it quickly fades from the mind of those who have seen the Portuguese paradise. When speaking of Cintra, it must not for a moment be supposed that nothing more is meant than the little town or city; by Cintra must be understood the entire region, town, palace, quintas, forests, crags, Moorish ruins which suddenly burst on the view on rounding the side of a bleak, savage and sterile-looking mountain. The other side is a mingled scene of fairy beauty, artificial elegance, savage grandeur, domes, turrets, enormous trees, flowers and waterfalls, such as is met with nowhere else beneath the sun."

"Dizzy" and His London

All lovers of the primrose will want to see something of Lord Beaconsfield when they are in London. Disraeli's statue is in Parliament square and like other famous men he has many birthplaces. No. 22 Theobald's road, Bloomsbury, seems to have the best tradition. He worked at 6 Frederick place, Old Jewry, four years before he startled the world with his "Vivian Grey." Then he lived at 29 Park lane, opposite Grosvenor gate, until 1872 where he wrote "Coningsby" and made his climb to political power. Later he lived at 2 Whitehall gardens. His last London home was at 19 Curzon street, where he died, and where, 'tis said, he gentiy declined to see Queen Victoria because "she only wants me to give a message to the prince consort."

Jewish Festival

The Feast of Lights is Hanukka, the Jewish Feast of Dedication. The distinctive ceremonial feature of this festival today is the kindling of lights in the home and in the synagogue, one on the first evening, the number being increased by one on each consecutive evening, until eight lights are lit on the last evening of the festival. Special prayers inspired by the historic event commemorating the triumph of monotheism over heathenism, of the forces of light over the forces of darkness, are recited. Special scriptural portions are read in the synagogue. In modern times, children's festivals, in which the story and significance of the feast are recounted, have become a marked feature in the celebration of the Feast of Dedication.

Transporting Criminals

In England, under a statute of 1597, "dangerous rogues" might be banished by justices, but no system of transportation of criminals can be said to have arisen until the time of Charles II, when justices were empowered to send certain offenders to America instead of inflicting the death penalty. In 1717 transportation was authorized as a substitute for other punishments than hanging, and the contract system, by which individuals agreed to transport convicts in return for their labor during the period of sentence, was established. Protests from America were frequent, but unavailing. Most of the colonies received some of these criminals.

Observer Saw Beauty in Locomotive's Steam

In a period that provides us with opportunities of learning how interesting and even beautiful a thing a railway can be, it is instructive to recall that an earnest observer of a century ago saw, in the Liverpool and Manchester line, a beauty, apparently, such as Keats discovered in the Greek vase on which he bestowed immortality. Alexander Somerville, in his "Autobiography of a Working Man," published originally in 1848, and referring to a period during the thirties of the last century, states:

"All sights which I had seen in London and elsewhere—the beautiful, the grand, the wonderful—shrank into comparative nothingness when, after reaching Liverpool I went into the country for a week, in the neighborhood of Prescott and saw (each day I sought to see it, each hour of the day I could have stood to see it again) the white steam shooting through the landscape of trees, meadows and villages; loaded with merchandise, men and women, and human enterprise, rolling along under the steam. I had seen no sight like that; I have seen nothing to excel it since. In beauty and grandeur the world has nothing beyond it."—Manchester (England) Guardian.

Brazilian Nut Pickers Victimized by Buyers

The business of gathering brazil nuts in the Amazon jungles resolves itself into a skin game for the natives concerned when the traders, who follow the harvest, arrive with their boatloads of rum and trinkets.

Near a group of huts on the river bank the trade boat stops, writes Hugo Franklin in the Boston Transcript, and there the merchandise is displayed in an improvised "store." The trader sits, like the spider in its web, behind a battery of jugs of rum, surrounded by a few pieces of bright colored goods, tobacco, bags of salt, cans of kerosene, sometimes even cases of cheap beer.

The nut pickers could make a good profit on the long trip up the river to the nut forests if only they would shun the trader, but little by little their crop piles up beside the store. At the end of the season the poor natives owe money to the traders and, unhappy and penniless, offer to pay the debt by helping to load the nuts on the boat and work their way back to civilization.

Inspiration of Great Song

Carrie Jacobs Bond, author of "The End of a Perfect Day," describes the circumstances under which the song was written as follows: "The story of the writing of 'The End of a Perfect Day' has been told many, many times and in many, many ways, but the truth is a very simple story. The inspiration came to me as I was viewing a wonderful sunset from the top of Mount Rubidoux in Riverside, Calif. I had been motoring through southern California and we had been seeing many beautiful sights, but the glory of this sunset from the mountains was the most beautiful thing I had ever seen. I hurried back to the Mission inn to get ready for dinner and while dressing I thought how I wished I could express my thanks to those friends in some little way, just out of the ordinary, and almost at once came the words of 'A Perfect Day.'"

Peculiar Hairdressing

German tribes, in olden days, paid a good deal of attention to their hair, says an article in a Boston paper. In certain districts a red dye apparently was used to dye the hair a bright red. The more easterly German tribes usually wore their hair long and loose over the shoulder, men as well as women.

The Saxons, however, cut their hair fairly short. Some western tribes had a curious custom of tying the hair on the right side of the head into a knot, with the ends greased to make them protrude like horns. The women in all parts of Germany had a great variety of combs and brooches to keep their long hair in place, although unmarried women appear to have worn their hair loose.—Detroit News.

That Word "Funny"

The word "funny" has a very wide meaning in Scotland. It does not merely signify amusing or entertaining; it is more frequently used to describe something interesting, unusual, or even alarming. In childhood to feel funny on a Monday morning often meant a day off school; it was a vague form of illness that might be anything, and was safer than complaining of anything local. "He's a funny character" does not imply that he is an amusing person, but that he is rather shady. Perhaps the funniest use of "funny" was that of the old lady who asked her little grandson when he returned from a visit to the neighboring gas works, "Was it funny, Johnnie; was it funny?"

Popular Old Legend

In the middle of the Sixteenth century the legend of the "Wandering Jew" received popular life in Germany owing to the claims of a man who announced himself to be the "Ewige Jude" himself. In Hamburg he gave his name as Ahasuerus, and stated that he had been a shoemaker in Jerusalem who would not suffer Christ to rest at his door when fainting under the weight of the cross.

He struck Jesus, and ordered him to move on, whereupon Jesus said: "I will stand here and rest, but thou shalt go on until the last day." This man's story was subsequently published on the authority of a Lutheran clergyman, who claimed to have met the Jew in Hamburg.

Immediately following the business on hand the doors to a larger room were opened, revealing a beautifully trimmed tree. The children, who were guests of the club, were highly pleased with the tree and the gifts it bore.

A program featured instrumental music by Beatrice, Marian, George and Will Cilker; a saxophone solo by Lura Magneson, and recitations by Jean Crain and Barbara Howes.

The committee in charge of arrangements, Mrs. Leslie Dow, Mrs. Irving Butler and Mrs. Paul Arnerich, served delicious refreshments at the close of a pleasant afternoon.

SPORT FORUM

Jack Dempsey $50,000 or more providing the Garden officials see fit to declare him the third man in the ring. Persistent rumors to the effect that Dempsey will not only referee but act in the station of pubicity manager are current. At present, W. L. Stribing and Jack Sharkey seem likey to be opponents, but it would take quite a little ballyhoo to stage the fight advantageously, and many are skeptical, even with Dempsey as an added attraction. It looks as though the faithful were at last wise to those boys.
